Dana is a published author and artist and currently lectures part time at LASALLE College of the Arts. She has a BA from the then University of Singapore and an MA (Fine Arts) from LASALLE Open University. She has worked as a reporter at The Straits Times and as a book editor and project co-ordinator. Her most recent work was She Shapes a Nation, a short documentary inspired by the 80th birthday of Mrs Hedwig Anuar in November 2008, capturing the nuances of women's lives and women's choices in five decades of nation making. She also wrote the book, Days of Being Wild, on opposition voters in the Singapore General Elections of 2006.

"Everyone who is a volunteer knows the take-away far outweighs the giving. My engagement with and on behalf of AWARE has taught me to temper ambition with humility, and to always evaluate my stand, in particular my culpability in the very systems we are trying to change. This is what I hope to give back."
